About pitch and tone. It appears that there is a phonetic difference between certain apparently homophonous words. Examples are [jáp] ‘tent’ and [jàp] ‘attic’. How real is this pitch difference? How often does it occur? What are the phonotactic conditions [k-, j-, l-, n-, m-] or related to [-ʔ/-k]? Is it a pitch difference, or an onset register difference? Is it related to the origin of the word [i.e. is the rising pitch found in words with a recent Central Bodish origin]?
